

Mission - Edinburgh 2010

The Archbishop of York
Dr John Sentamu

"Edinburgh 2010 is a watershed moment for the Good News of God in Christ. It is the first time in almost 100 years that the Christian family has met together like this. The sheer variety of denominations and nationalities from all over the globe attending is itself a cause for celebration. Jesus Christ prayed that his followers might be one as He and the father are one-making Christ visible together as they worship and bear witness to Him. That hasn't always happened, but this moment proves that it can.

"This ecumenical moment reminds us that no part of the One Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church has a monopoly on fulfilling Christ's mission to the world. In fact, to have any credibility as the Body of Christ, the world has to see Christians from all traditions having a common purpose."

Edinburgh 2010

The first World Missionary Conference held in Scotland 100 years ago brought together diverse Christian denominations and mission agencies to define and plan world mission. Attendees aimed for "The evangelisation of the world in this generation."

Members of several Western Protestant denominations and mission agencies, most from North America and Northern Europe, met in Edinburgh in June 1910. Notable absences were the Orthodox, Roman Catholic, Pentecostals and most Evangelical churches and organisations, as well as Christians from Africa, and Latin America; while Asia was very minimally represented. Women and young people were also largely missing from the conference.

A century on, and this time the conference will see a much broader representation of denominations, , sexes and ages from more than 60 countries. The aim is to learn, share and discuss what it means to witness to Christ together today. The whole Edinburgh 2010 package has included, over the past three years, a study process looking into the challenges of the Christian mission today, a writing contest and youth media contest, and a Centenary Conference taking place from 2 to 6 June in Edinburgh.

The Anglican Communion has been involved throughout what is a key moment for global Christianity, and as part of the Anglican Communion Office's programme to develop young Anglican/Episcopal leaders, six of the nine delegates attending the Centenary Conference will be young leaders.

After the conference-where the Archbishop of York Dr John Sentamu will address the closing ceremony-the delegates will travel to London. Here they will stay at the Anglican Communion Office, will visit mission initiatives in the Church of England, and meet Archbishop of Canterbury Dr Rowan Williams at Lambeth Palace.
